Double-Disc Deluxe Editions Of Group's First Two Albums In-Stores Now As Norwegian Trio Marks 25th Anniversary With Final World Tour

Available August 6th 2010 thru Warner Music / Rhino Records

LOS ANGELES / HAMBURG – After nine albums, an iconic music video, and sales of more than 36 million worldwide, a-ha is celebrating its 25-year anniversary in 2010 with the Norwegian trio's final tour, a globe-spanning jaunt the band has dubbed "Ending On a High Note." Expected to cover four continents and 15 countries, the tour started March 4th in Argentina, covers shows in July and October in Germany, Austria & Switzerland and will finally end in Oslo with three sold out concerts in Dec. 2nd – 4th 2010

Rhino.com will offer fans extended versions of a-ha's first two albums – HUNTING HIGH AND LOW and SCOUNDREL DAYS. These double-disc collections feature the original recordings expanded with unreleased and rare demos, alternate mixes and live recordings.

The deluxe version of HUNTING HIGH AND LOW uncovers several rare and unreleased gems such as the original 7" version of "Take On Me" and an early demo version of the same song called "Lesson One"; demos for "The Sun Always Shines On T.V.," "Train Of Thought," and the title track as well as fan favorite B-side "Driftwood."

The extended version of SCOUNDREL DAYS contains demos or alternate versions of each album track; the B-side "This Alone Is Love"; as well as unreleased live performances of "Train Of Thought," "I've Been Losing You," "Blue Sky" and "Cry Wolf" recorded in England.
